DISCIPLESHIP ENVIRONMENT

Now more than ever people may be attuned to how deep the children's faith was before the COVID-19 crisis hit. What a great gift we've received! To have the vantage point with the ability to look back at the successful strategy of discipleship is so valuable. Now that you have seen what happens when people cannot attend church, what takes center stage in the discipleship environment you are creating? The environment where children gather needs intentionality. Now is the time to begin asking the right questions, generating ideas to support what God is speaking, and fitting the right resources into the places where they need to be.

Questions

1. How can you discover the stories of how COVID-19 has impacted the lives of the children/families to allow for pastoral connections.
2. In what ways can you discover the spiritual growth that took place during the "stay at home" season?
3. What spiritual goals will you focus on in the next few weeks for your kids? Why?
4. How can your service elements support the spiritual growth of your kids?
5. How can your curriculum be utilized to provide a foundation for the spiritual development of your kids?
6. What resources could you provide to encourage support for continued spiritual development in the home?

Ideas

Asking the right questions is only part of the process. It then becomes necessary to generate possible solutions to move forward in God's plan and timing.

Resources

Nothing is more frustrating than struggling to create something from the ground up not knowing there was a solution ready to go which made the job easier. The resources section may not have all of the solutions you are looking for, but perhaps there is enough there to save you some time and effort in creating the change you are looking for.
